I've been to the Shout House numerous times. I love the vibe and the customer and employee interaction, and the performers are certainly never at a loss for quick, wise-ass remarks. I was just praying they wouldn't make me look too stupid in front of Suzannah. We stayed there for about another half-hour. Then, as soon as the magazine crew turned their heads, we were out of there for some privacy. We stopped by Whiskey Girl and then dropped into The Bitter End for a bit.

What surprised me most was just how much we have in common. It was obvious in the first few minutes of conversation. Everything from our taste in music, our likes and dislikes, where we spend our time out on the town, past personal and relationship challenges and all the way down to cowboy boots and cars.

Truthfully, her best quality is the fact that, head to toe, she's just beautiful. The chemistry between the two of us was off the hook in my mind. I'm thinking... and hoping... that you're going to get the same answer from her.

The two best parts of the night were the first few seconds after meeting Suzannah and the moment after we ditched the magazine crew. The rest stays between me and Suzannah. We exchanged numbers for a date later this week. Maybe this blind date thing does work after all. I had an awesome time, and the whole experience was just great!

TY THE KNOT?

Suzannah and Ty really hit it off. Whether or not they end up getting married (ceremony at The Marble Room, reception at The Shout House?), this was definitely one of PacificSD's best set-ups to date, which, admittedly, probably results from the fact that the daters chose each other. It just goes to show that, if at first you don't succeed, Ty, Ty again. For your chance at romance and glory, email setmeup@pacificsandiego.com

You can always count on having some good laughs and entertainment when you go to the Shout House. As soon as we got there, I just kept thinking, "Wait for it. Wait for it." I just knew they were going to make us do something completely ridiculous and embarrassing. But, much to my surprise, it ended up being a lot of fun. We laughed a lot. It was classic.

After our on-stage appearance, we stayed for about half an hour, then we went out on our own. We went over to Whiskey Girl for a few and then walked down to The Bitter End.

There was definitely some chemistry between me and Ty. I think we both felt that pretty much from the moment we met. The whole night was great. And, don't get me wrong, I love the magazine crew, but the best part was getting to know Ty away from the cameras. That's when we truly got to be ourselves... uninterrupted.

At the end of the night, Ty drove me to my car. We talked some more, exchanged numbers and said goodnight. I don't kiss and tell, but, if there wasn't a goodnight kiss, then I'd have nothing to tell. Does that make sense? I don't like to speculate on the future. I prefer to live in the present, which, fortunately for me at this point, is just awesome. Oh, and the magazine has definitely redeemed itself. Thanks a million!

"The magazine has definitely redeemed itself." —Suzannah

Suzannah's September blind date with Kevin "The Food Dude" Roberts did not create a love connection. Not with Kevin, anyway...

After reading the story, Ty, a San Diego nightlife entrepreneur, contacted PacificSD to request a date with Suzannah. We agreed to make the introduction on one condition: the date would have to be covered in the magazine. Ty agreed immediately. Convincing Suzannah was more difficult, but she thought Ty looked cute enough in the photo we sent her to give the guy a chance — and give PacificSD a second chance — so we set them up for the October issue's Blind Date.

Ty and Suzannah met for the first time at the Marble Room, on Fifth Avenue, downtown. They enjoyed a fabulous meal, then headed to the Shout House, where they were serenaded by hilarious dueling piano players. The date seemed to be going perfectly.

"The magazine has definitely redeemed itself," Suzannah said the next day. Over the next couple weeks, she and Ty were spotted together, walking, smiling, holding hands. Then, Ty sent a shocking text message to PacificSD's publisher:

HEY, DP. WE JUST GOT ENGAGED. YOU ROCK. THANK YOU!

Kinda gives you the chills, right? We called the lovebirds immediately.

PacificSD: How did you know she was the one?

TY: Honestly, I was taken by her in every way and I truly think it started the moment I first saw her picture in your publication. It was only confirmed the second we met in person. I think when something's right, you just know it, and know it to your core. By the end of our first date, the blind date, I knew I was fully engaged in making this go long-term. By the third date, love was written all over both our faces.

PacificSD: You're moving pretty fast, huh?

TY: Not by our calendar, I'd have to say. I guess when you truly find what you've always been looking for, then why waste time and wait to get on with the next step in your life? It's just an awesome feeling!

PacificSD: What are Suzannah's cutest habits?

TY: It's gotta be here smile and wink combo. There's so many little things, really. I'm gonna sound a bit crazy bringing them all up.

PacificSD: Where and when is the wedding?

TY: The thought as of now is later next summer or early fall. It's a toss-up between a destination wedding or just staying local. Suzannah has the final say on that, so let's go with her answer, okay?

SHE SAYS...

PacificSD: You're marrying Ty? Really?

SUZANNAH: I think I may have known even before we met in person. When we met that first night and looked into each other's eyes, we both just knew. I looked at him and felt home, if that makes any sense. When he held my hand that night, it felt like we had been together forever. And from that point on, the feeling just became stronger and stronger. We haven't been apart since.

PacificSD: You met eight weeks ago.

Do you feel like you're rushing into things? SUZANNAH: Not in the least! I feel more confident about this decision than I have ever felt about anything in my entire life. And this is so unlike me. I always take my time, but when you know it's right, you know it's right. We both knew it that first night.

PacificSD: Where and when?

SUZANNAH: We are both so excited, and there are so many options. I am overwhelmed. We did decide that Ty is going to be in charge of the entertainment aspect of it though, since that's his forte. At least we know that will go off without a hitch. I, on the other hand, totally have my work cut out for me. Any suggestions?

PacificSD: What's the best thing about Ty?

SUZANNAH: Where do I begin? Seriously! He is everything to me, so it's hard to say. As I see him in new and different situations, I am constantly finding new things that I love about him.

PacificSD: What's Ty's cutest habit?

SUZANNAH: He has so, so, so many. But I don't want to embarrass him... too much. I'll just say that I love it when he leaves me voicemails during the day just to tell me that he loves me and that he's thinking about me. And the texts and cards are pretty sweet, too. I'll leave it at that so we don't make him look like the total softie that he is.
